

hISTORY
HISTORY
STORY

@andesenglishonline

history

- It refers to the study of past events, particularly human events and developments. It can also refer to a chronological record of these events.

'I enjoy reading about ancient history.'

'The history of the city dates back to the 18th century.'

History

- When capitalized, it typically refers to the academic discipline or field of study that examines and interprets past events.

'She is pursuing a degree in History.'

'The professor specializes in European History.'

story

- It generally refers to a narrative or account of events, whether real or fictional. It often involves characters, plot, and a sequence of events.

'I heard an interesting story about a haunted house.'

'He enjoys writing science fiction stories.'

@andesenglishonline

stressful

or stressing

@andesenglishonline

stressful

- Stressful (ADJECTIVE): It describes a situation, event, or experience that causes stress or mental/emotional strain. It refers to the quality or characteristic of something that induces feelings of pressure, tension, or anxiety.

'My job is very stressful.'
'Moving to a new city can be a stressful experience.'

stressing

- Stressing (VERB, present participle of 'stress'): It is the continuous form of the verb 'stress'. It is used to indicate the ongoing act of causing stress or emphasizing a particular point or concern. It implies an action or behavior that places emphasis, importance, or pressure on something.

'She is stressing the importance of meeting the deadline.'
'The teacher is stressing the need to study for the exam.'

house

or

howe

@andesenglishonline

house

- A 'house' refers to a physical structure or building where people live. It emphasizes the tangible aspects of a dwelling.

'They purchased a beautiful house in the suburbs.'

'The old house had a large backyard and a spacious living room.'

home

- A 'home' goes beyond a physical space; it represents a sense of belonging, comfort, and emotional attachment. It's associated with personal experiences and memories.

'After a long day, it's nice to come back to a warm and welcoming home.'

'Home is where I feel the most loved and accepted.'

In summary...

- Regarding the use of verbs with 'home,' it's worth noting that while 'house' can be bought or moved to, 'home' is more closely associated with the emotional connection rather than the physical act. We often say 'buy a house' or 'move to a house.' However, 'make a house a home' is a common phrase that highlights the process of creating a personal and comfortable environment.

'They bought a house and made it a loving home.'

'We moved to a new house and gradually turned it into our dream home.'

So, while you can technically buy or move to a house, the term 'home' carries a deeper emotional meaning that is typically associated with the experience of creating a personal space of comfort, belonging, and cherished memories.

Attend

or

Assist

@andesenglishonline

attend

- This verb refers to being present at an event, gathering, or meeting. It implies being a participant or observer without necessarily providing assistance or help. It focuses on being present and engaging in the activity. (go)

'I will attend the conference tomorrow.' (Estaré presente en la conferencia mañana.)

assist

- This verb means to help, support, or provide aid to someone or something. It implies taking an active role in providing assistance or aid to someone in need or contributing to a task or activity. (help)

'She will assist the teacher in organizing the event.' (Ella ayudará a la profesora a organizar el evento.)

Destiny

or

Destimation

@andesenglishonline

destiny

- "Destiny" refers to a predetermined course of events or outcomes in a person's life. It implies that events are predetermined or inevitable, often associated with a sense of fate or a higher power guiding one's life.

She believed that it was her destiny to become a great leader.

destination

- "Destination" refers to the place or point to which someone or something is going or being sent. It indicates the final location or goal of a journey or a specific purpose for reaching a particular place.

Our destination for the vacation is a beautiful beach resort.